George DeCamp

"From Jamaica Bay to Kenya"

People travel the world in search of special images. Sometimes the image is in your own back yard or your nearby wildlife preserve. Does it matter if its a Raccoon or a Rhino as long as the image evokes a response from your audience?

George will take us on a trip around LI to some of the places he enjoys here and then to some far off lands, like Kenya. He will explore both the underwater world and the world above water in this presentation.

George DeCamp is an avid nature and landscape photographer who resides on LI. His travels include Africa, Bonaire, Curacao, Mexico and Roatan as well as other countries and extensive travel in the USA. The subject matter in his work is diverse.

His images have been published in various magazines including Audubon and Natures Best, used by the EPA in their journals and have been on display in the LI Museum in Stony Brook, the Smithsonian Museum of Natural History in Washington DC, the Natural History Museum in London and others around the world.

In October, 2007 he was named a Highly Commended winner in the Animal Behavior: Birds category in the Shell/BBC Wildlife Photographer of the year awards in London, the largest and most prestigious contest of its type in the world.
